2018/19 UPDATES

New Professional Career Coaching

Launched this past spring in partnership with InsideTrack, SPS now offers a new career coaching program tailored to meet the needs of working adult students. Professional career coaches will work with undergraduate students on career exploration, planning and professional development to support their long-term success in the workplace. With personalized support from their career coach and interactive digital content on topics including career strategy, career planning, networking, branding, self-promotion, interview skills and more, SPS students will gain the insights, skills and confidence to advance their career. The program's flexibility allows for coaches and students to engage through whichever channel they prefer, whether it be voice, video, email, text or mobile apps.

Online Expansion

In keeping with the School of Professional Studies mission to provide accessibility to innovative learning, this academic year will feature a variety of new course offerings made available completely online. Courses range from accounting, English literature, writing/composition, philosophy, organization behavior, marketing, and more. SPS anticipates additional online courses in upcoming academic years.

Information Systems Major Update

To meet the needs of today's IT industry, the information systems major will begin development on new computer information system courses. Undergraduate subject areas in development include programming, artificial intelligence, and data science.

APPLICATION INFORMATION

Review

The admissions review committee reads each application fully and employs a holistic review process dedicated to determining an applicant's preparedness to meet the academic rigors of a Northwestern University education. In addition to reviewing academic records, the committee also pays close attention to other indicators of likely success at Northwestern, such as work experience, professional advancement, evidence of commitment to completing the degree, and other relevant factors that demonstrate persistence and motivation.

The most successful applications will include:

- Recent record of academic achievement at a regionally accredited institution
- A clear statement of purpose highlighting educational and professional goals
- Professional resume that highlights occupational experience, skills and achievements

Admitted applicants may be offered additional resources, support and guidelines at the discretion of the decision committee. These terms of admissions are set in an effort to foster academic success and a positive student experience at Northwestern.
